Beautifully presented photos tell inspiring stories, from famous buildings to religious monuments, stars to landscapes. Discover never before seen stories as a new photo is revealed every time you open a new tab. Because of how powerful emotions are on people, seeing a picture can really start a series of thoughts that will guide your behavior in a way that you would not have even imagined before. That's a really difficult task to accomplish. It requires an extremely powerful tool to bring emotions to life. To understand how they are made and how to manipulate them, we have to go back to the birth of photography. It all started in the 19th century when the invention of the daguerrotype camera made possible to view the world in a unique way. The camera used a wax-based material, which chemically hardened into a flat surface. It was placed near a lens, which had the ability to capture any detail of a scene. Photographs are made when light is refracted by the lens, and hits the photographic plate, where it is chemically processed to produce the desired effect. Back then, the only way to deliver a picture to people was with a tangible object. People could hold the picture and see it as if they were there, and that's how we got the concept of "voyeurism". It was used by the military to deliver a message to everyone at the same time. It is considered that the daguerrotype is the oldest form of photography, even though the current versions look far more advanced. Around the World:

Belgium This display shows the Daguerreotypes in Belgium. Image credit: de Dichtwarbe (Network of the most excellent collections in the world) Photograph collection of: Antoine Claudel How did you build this? I have the real original daguerrotype on my wall. That's a work in my collection. I can't have it online, because it would certainly be stolen. The creation of a Daguerreotype is indeed a complex process. First, the camera device is focused on a specific part of the scene. The shutter speed is selected and the light level is measured. That allows for better definition. The exposure is done by capturing the light rays on the photographic plate. This operation can take a long time, up to 5 minutes. Then, the wax is processed, and at that point a negative image is deposited on the plate. The completed

 # Photo discovery # New tab screen # Presented by # Visual storytelling # Easy installation # Add to chrome # Chrome can do so much # Efficent design # Not affiliated with # Exposure # # Connect with Exposure: • We think that we can all agree that we know a beautiful photo when we see it. Skipping all the relativity-related and proper scientific explanations, it's just the way we're wired. Since photos are such a big part of our culture and beautiful photos are have such a powerful effect on our mood and brain, why not replace the boring New Tab screens from our browsers with something more "artsy?" Get a new stunning photo each time you open a new tab in Chrome This is exactly what this Chrome extension dubbed Exposure New Tab does - it provides you with an eye-pleasing photo alongside with other adjacent details (photo name and author) every time you open a new tab. It does not require any type of pre-configuration or login procedure and deploying on your computer's Chrome browser should not take anything more than a couple of seconds, since you only have to click the "ADD TO CHROME" button from its official Web Chrome Store listing. Mood-enhancing photos and the possibility to shuffle them The extension itself is primarily aimed at capturing the attention of users who are actively into photography since it works towards increasing the popularity of Exposure, a website for telling visual stories. Besides the photo itself and various details, the extension also provides you with the possibility to shuffle for more photos, as well as mark your favorite ones as "enjoyed." There are a couple more options: in the upper part of the Chrome's window, a quick link towards exploring more photo stories and sharing your story if you do so choose to, on the aforementioned website, of course. By clicking the picture, you can check-out the artist's page and subscribe to his or her stories. Brings Exposure-powered photography on your Chrome new tab screen To conclude, if you don't require a more "functional" new tab screen on your Chrome browser and you like the idea of being provided with a new attractive photo each time you open a new tab then, by all means, give Exposure New Tab a try-out. You can read our about page here: What we actually do If you click the button, we automatically find the best photo currently available at Exposure, a website for telling visual stories. We gather information about the photographer and the photos he or she has created. Every time you open a new tab, we find you a new great photo. By the way, Exposure is a personal project of Ardi Paas. We are just the ones that made it possible. Why we need your help We are looking to become financially independent and this means all the hosting costs that we have have to pay on a monthly basis. We are looking for external investment and help. We are looking to sell "Exposure" as a product, either through the Chrome Web Store, through mobile platforms or through some other distribution channel. So we need your help to buy all the hosting services, create new websites, getting our brand known and find more investment partners. If you are interested, we are happy to send you further information. What is the entire process? We need your help to drive traffic to our website so that people can get inspired and are ready to start their story. There are only 3 steps in the entire process: Step 1: Give us your email address and we'll let you know when Exposure is available on the Chrome Store Step 2: If you want, you can give us your first name to be mentioned on Exposure's page and/or on our social media pages. Step 3: You receive an email a couple of weeks later with a link to your own personal account on Exposure, where you can change your username, your first name and choose if you want to receive emails. In short, if you want to be mentioned,
